The Herald of This Morning.
National Associated Press to the Star.

New York, Feb. 8.—The Herald editorially discusses the decision rendered yesterday by the Electoral Commission in the Florida case, and says that though the decision is interpreted as against the Democrats and for the Republicans, it is not certain that viewed in all its possible applications it will be advantageous to Hayes.

It believes that one reason, which inclined the tribunal to restrict its labors, was the imperative necessity of concluding before the 4th of March.

It questions the recognized State authorities in Louisiana must be accepted in the face of the shameful revelations made, it will be a condition of the law which results in the defiance of the will of the people as expressed at the polls. But this recognition of the will of the people is not evident on both ways, as the Republican Elector in Oregon, who, it is alleged, is disqualified, can not even get his case before the Commission for want of the Governor's certificate.

The appointed Elector Cronin can not, because he possesses that certificate, be ignored. According to this ruling the excluded Elector can not have the opportunity of showing he is not disqualified.

The Times of This Morning.
The Times, while expressing gratification at the decision of the Tribunal, points out the fact that the first legal question has been decided by a strict party vote, and the act will be generally accepted as a partisan act.

The first decision of the Commission brings the Democrats to grief. They had erected a magnificent structure which they chose to regard as a real Commission. At the first touch this ideal structure tumbles like a house of cards. If it turns out at the end that our friends lie in an uncomfortable bed they must remember that they made it for themselves.

The World of This Morning.
The World contends that even if the evidence accepted by the Commission in the Florida case should be sufficient to enable to determine this particular case, that principle could not be safely adopted as a guide on future occasions. It does not believe the public will accept the conclusion of the Commission, and that it can only avail itself of such information as may be filtered through the President of the Senate.

The Tribune of This Morning.
The Tribune regards the decision as a great victory for the friends of Hayes. It does not doubt that the final decision of the Commission will be in favor of the Hayes Electors. It also expresses the conviction that all attempts to impeach the vote of Louisiana are now useless.

The Cincinnati Papers.
[From the Commercial's Washington Special.]
This settles the question that the Commission will not go behind the returns, and gives an assurance that the verdict of the people in the selection of Rutherford B. Hayes to be President of the United States will be sustained and confirmed.

Humphreys, the Florida Elector, held the office of United States Shipping Commissioner for many years at Pensacola, but on the 24th of last September he tendered his resignation to United States Judge William B. Woods, the proper authority to pass upon it, and it was accepted by Judge Woods on the 5th of last October. The evidence which the Commission have decided to hear with reference to this point will establish the facts as stated.

[From Enquirer's Washington Special.]
A chat with cool-headed Democrats suggests a phase in the Florida case which yet presents hope, even confidence. It should be born in mind that with the Drew certificates the whole Democratic case is presented, because accompanying it is the receipt of the vote of the State by counties; the quo warranto proceedings, the action of the Legislature, and the decision of the Circuit Court. This is already before the Tribunal, and there is not a particle of evidence in rebuttal, because the Republicans, relying on the prima facie case, preferred not to go to the Tribunal. At the rooms of Col. Pelton to-night, all the prominent Democrats are in good spirits. O'Connor during the evening dropped in, and was in the best of spirits. He says with reference to the decision, that Tilden has lost one point in many, and Hayes has won one out of a few.

The Democrats have no reason to be despondent. True, the Republicans will gain courage and hope. They have every trick to win; the loss of a single chance settles their case. Tilden has 184 undisputed votes, and can afford to lose, as he has to-day, out of his many chances. Concede that Florida is lost, which is still an open question, the Republicans have yet much to gain. Tilden can only be cheated out of the Presidency by the strictest application of party lines and votes.

[From Gazette's Washington Special.]
The Republicans thus win a victory in the first encounter, and the most important question of all growing out of the contest is determined in their favor. But in gaining this triumph they practically open the way for the Democrats to attack them at a point which they hoped would be amply guarded by the result of to-day's work. The question of the eligibility of Electors in all its phases remains for further argument and for a future decision, and it is played in this position by the action of Judge Bradley in voting with the Democrats on the second proposition submitted to the Commission. The Republicans have very few fears of the result of this side issue as far as Florida is concerned, for they understand that Humphreys, the Elector whose vote is questioned, is already in this city, and is prepared to prove by conclusive evidence that he resigned before the date of the Presidential election. There are, however, two Electors in Louisiana whose votes can be challenged, on account of alleged disqualifications, and there is of course the final struggle over the Watts case in Oregon.

The determination of this question of eligibility in the Florida case will not by any means settle the whole controversy as far as the returns from that State are concerned, because the main point still remains open, namely, which of the two sets of conflicting returns is the legal and valid expression of the will of the State.

Governor Wells' Quarters.
National Associated Press to the Star.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—Gov. Wells, of Louisiana, is now confined at the Capitol in the room occupied by Stewart, Woolley and other recalcitrant witnesses of former times. It is a large, dry, well-ventilated room, but a little dark on a dark day, but it is the best room the Sergeant-at-Arms can furnish at present.

Wells complains to the House that he is kept in a dungeon; says he is not a prisoner, but an American citizen.

The Senate.
WASHINGTON, Feb. 8.—At 2:30 the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the Indian appropriation.

NEWS FROM THE METROPOLIS.
National Associated Press to the Star.

Buoys Carried Away.
NEW YORK, Feb. 8.—During the recent movement of ice in the harbor of this city, many of the iron buoys were swept out to sea, thus removing channel marks, and rendering navigation difficult and dangerous. The official list shows that thirty-three buoys were carried away by ice. A steamer is engaged in searching for them, some of which, with sinkers attached weighing over seven thousand pounds, have drifted over ten miles out to sea.

A Fire.
broke out about 1 o'clock this morning in Martin E. Murphy's planing and saw-mill, foot of Grand street. The building was damaged $8,000, and about $3,000 worth of lumber stored therein was destroyed. Daum's lumber-yard in Broome street was damaged $2,000.

Taking Care of the Express Robbers.
National Associated Press to the Star.

ROUGHER, N. Y., Feb. 8.—Sheriff Dutcher and Officer Scanlan this morning took the 10:40 train for Albany, having in charge the three express robbers who were captured by the latter officer near this city a few weeks ago. They will each serve a term in the Albany Penitentiary.

LATEST LOCAL.
The funeral of Mrs. Peters took place from St. Xavier Church this morning at 9 o'clock.

The Board of Public Works met in regular session but transacted no business of importance.

JAMES SCOTT, a colored man, dropped dead last night on Canal street between Vine and Race. An inquest will be held to-morrow.

A WELL-DRESSED MAN, who gave his name as Mitchell, made his appearance at River & Partridge's dry-goods house, Nos. 147 and 149 Fourth street, and stated to one of the clerks that he wanted some silks at about $1.65 per yard. He ordered twenty-five yards of the silk, and told the clerk to send the goods to the Grand Hotel. A boy was sent, but the lad refused to turn them over to Mitchell, and took them back. On inquiry no such name as Mitchell was found on the register.

The James White Case.
The trial of James White, for procuring illegal votes, proceeded before Judge Swing this morning.

W. H. Rigdon was the first witness. He said while, on election day, at the Second Precinct of the Fourth Ward, a man named Saunders called my attention to a man who was voting.

The man to whom my attention was directed was five feet eight inches in height, wore gray clothes and a soft hat. When I left the voting place, corner of Paul and Pike streets, White accompanied him to the back of the lot-box.

W. F. Saunders testified—Was at the polls election morning; saw White there between 7 and 8 o'clock; White left before I did; I started down to follow a party to the Fifth Ward polls.

There were some six or eight in the party. They were standing on the corner of Kilgour and Pearl streets. I saw White take to this party at that place. One of them, who gave his name as Snell, voted at the Fifth Ward polls.

Lost sight of the men on Pearl street; the man who gave his name as Snell had on a lead-colored suit; I saw him last leaning on the railing at the Second Precinct polls, Fifth Ward. Am a cigar-maker. White did not attempt to vote with me there.

Richard C. Rohner, City Clerk, was called to show a regular organization of the polls.

Col. L. C. Weir testified that White came to him before the election and wanted employment in connection with the election.

Witness told him he had nothing to do with it. After the election White came to him again and said he could give the names of twenty-seven illegal voters, the names and places at which they voted; that he was poor, with a large family depending on him, and would like to make money on this information. He said it was worth $1,500 down, $500 when the case was proven, and $500 when Mr. Matthews took his seat.

Ed. J. Thompson testified that on an invitation he went to see White, right before the election. Saw White, Brennan, Morgan, O'Brien, and others. When I went in I wanted a few minutes.

White said the party who wanted to see us would be there in a short time. Went down stairs awhile and returned, when I saw Holland. White was outside of the room; I went in with Brennan;

Holland gave me $5, and said he would give me twenty more in the morning; next morning returned about 6 o'clock; I was there about twenty minutes. White said Holland could not be there, but some one would take us down to the polls. Do not know who left the room with me. It was after 6:30 o'clock. Went down by myself to the Fourth Ward polls; some of the men I saw in the room were at the polls; the last I saw of White was in his office; saw Jack Conway at the polls; did not know his name until I heard at the polls that a man named Conway had been arrested; he had on light clothes and a light hat; stayed at the Fourth Ward polls about twenty minutes; then went down to the Eighth Ward, and remained there during the day.

Other witnesses testified to about the same facts.

CAROLINE PATZIG.
Was Her Death Caused by Poison?

An inquest was held on the body of Caroline Patzig, whose death was recorded Wednesday. It seemed that there was a suspicion of foul play in the case.

Dr. A. Bettman, who attended her, testified that he prescribed for her, but that she did not get the medicine. When he arrived a second time, he found in the house two phials labeled morphine; one bottle was empty and the other about half filled. He considered the husband a gentleman, and the cause of her death as paralysis of the lungs.

Mary Maynard, who lives in the building, stated that the deceased complained of heartiness and sore throat; never heard of her taking opium or morphine; she took sick Friday; told me last Saturday she would like to have a doctor; she told me that her husband treated her badly; he would strike her; she told me she had been married ten years, and had but one child, a girl, who was eight years old; deceased was not addicted to drinking; her husband treated her very harshly during her sickness; her husband after her death said she didn't need any medicine, all she wanted was opium or morphine.

Adam Miller testified that the deceased and Mr. Patzig did not live in harmony; that the deceased very often came to his place for whisky.

The husband, Robert Patzig, was next sworn and testified: Am a gilder, out of work; was born in France. Tuesday found my wife in bed. She complained of no pain; said she was very sleepy; thought it unnecessary to get a doctor as she was accustomed to the use of morphine; in one week she used two phials; began to use morphine eight years ago; a Kansas doctor advised her to use it; she bought the morphine at Kraus' drug-store; the last I bought for her at this place was on last Thursday; week before last I bought a phial of it at Fifth and Race; I treated her with a bottle of it; she drank too much whisky; she would drink as much as half a pint in the morning; then when drunk she would take the morphine; she took some whisky on Monday, and she died at 4:30 P. M. The case was then postponed until 4 o'clock to hear the post-mortem report.

COLD FEET.
Who ever knew a woman who was not afflicted with cold feet? And yet no one can have cold feet habitually and still be healthy, as healthy as they should be without them. This coldness is not causeless, since it deranges the system, all sickness, all pain, must have a definite cause. In general terms cold feet result from a poor circulation of the blood, the warm blood from the heart failing to reach the extremities.

This is caused, in part, by wearing tight boots, at least one size too small, as most young ladies do; by wearing tight bands around the limbs, by "tight lacing," etc. The circulation of the blood may be improved by removing these tight bands, by giving the lungs as much space as the Creator intended for them, wearing boots of the size and shape of the foot, and by friction of the whole surface of the body with a flannel or its equivalent. And when the blood circulates freely and the feet are warm, part of the headaches will disappear, as a natural consequence.

But in addition to these means, soak the feet at night in hot water till they are thoroughly warm, then dash on a little cold water, rubbing them briskly together, as easily effected. This treatment must be continued longer or shorter, according to circumstances, the degree of coldness, or the state of the system, or the state of the blood, or the state of the feet, or the state of the body.

White said the party who wanted to see us would be there in a short time. Went down stairs awhile and returned, when I saw Holland. White was outside of the room; I went in with Brennan;
